The sale of Herman Ely's numismatic collection was continued yesterday at Messrs Baugs & Co's. This collection is the most choice and valuable sold for many years and attracted the atteation of all the principal collectors in the United States, who were either present in person or were represented. The catalogue was compiled by W. Elliot Woodward, of Boston. The sale thus far has been satisfactory, although in nearly all instances the prices obtained for the rarer pieces have not been as large as those paid at some of the previous sales. Among the noteworthy pieces with the prices at which they were sold may be noted the following: Silver dollar, date 1794, $57; silver dollar, date 1704, bronze proof, $130; a haif dime, date 1802, not quite perfect, which is of extraordinary rarity and for which $400 has been paid, was sold for $40. The largest price paid for any one coin was $215 which was obtained for a quarter dollar, date 1827, of which not more than five or six original impressions are known. LIEUTENANT AUGUR'S SAD, DEATH

INSANE FROM INSOMNIA AND OVERWORK

HE ESCAPES FROM BLOOMINGDALE AND IS FOUND Excitement was caused in the neighborhood of the Bloomingdale Asylum for the Insane, at One-hundred-and-seventeenth-st. and the Boulevard, early yesterday morning, by the information that Lieutenant John J. P. Augur, of the United States Navy, had escaped from the institution. Lieutenant Augur was admitted to the asylum on December 4. He was suffering from nervous prostration, with frequent paroxysms of excitement. At times he was so violent that he attacked the attendants, and had to be kept in close confinement. He was under the delusion most of the time that some enemies were about to take his life. In the daytime, as a rule, he was kept in comfortable rooms in the central building, but at night he was transferred to a first-story room in the northeast wing of the asylum, the windows of which were barred. An attendant walked all night in the corridor past the door of his room. At 3 a. m. yesterday, Attendant Dana saw Lieutenant Augur pacing the floor of his room and spoke to him. The Lieutenant sprang through the door and knocked Dana down, but he was quieted after a short struggle. About ten minutes later Dana looked into the room and found it empty. Lieutenant Augur had broken the guard off one of the windows and had jumped out. As the window was only a few feet above the ground, the figitive had not been injured by the fall. He had climbed over a high fence which encloses the grounds, and his footsteps in the snow showed that he had started down the Boulevard.

An aiarm was given and a large searching party of attendants was sent out from the asylum. In a better the started and party of attendants was sent out from the asylum. In a better the started and party of attendants was sent out from the asylum. In a DEAD ON THE BOULEVARD jured by the fall. He had climbed over a high fence which encloses the grounds, and his footsteps in the snow showed that he had started down the Boulevard.

An alarm was given and a large searching party of attendants was sent out from the asylum. In a short time several policemen and persons living in the neighborhood were aiding in the search. A heavy fog impeded the search greatly. On the Boulevard the footsteps of the missing officer were soon lost to sight, and the lanterns of the searchers cast light only a few feet through the fog. It was known that the Lieutenant had left his room without other clothing than a night-shirt, and it was feared that he would suffer daugerons exposure. The absence of dark clothing increased the difficulty of discovering his body on the snow, in the darkness and fog. At daybreak the search was still unfinished, but the searchers by that time had lost hope of finding Lieutenant Augur alive. His night-shirt had been found in the Boulevard at One-hundreth-and-sixth-st. after several persons had passed that point at different times. It was thought impossible that a man entirely without clothing could long escape death from exposure in the snow, At 7 a. m. a shout from one of the searchers drew the crowd to a place on the west side of the Boulevard, a few feet below One-hundred-and-seventh-st. There lay the dead body of Augur, already cold and rigid. It was removed to the asylum. The physicians said that death had resulted from exhaustion and cold. Information of his death was sent to West Point, where one of Lieutenant Augur's brothers is a preceptor in the Military Academy. C. H. Nichols, medical superintendent of the Bloomingdale Asylum, made the following statement regarding the affair:

Lieutenant Augur was recently admitted to Blooming dale, suffering from nervous prostration with paroxysms of excitement, arising largely, if not wholly, from loss of sleep and severe professional daty while on a voyage in the Arctic seas last season. He had been passing through a period of e

Lieutenant Augur was the son of General Christopher C. Angur, at present stationed at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. He was thirty-one years old. He entered the Naval Academy at Annapolis in 1866, and was graduated in 1870. He was promoted to the rank of ensign July 13, 1871, and to that of master July 22, 1874. His last cruise was made to the Arctic regions on the Alliance, Captain George H. Wadleigh, commander. On his return to New-York m July, 1878, he obtained leave of absence and visited his father, who was then in command of the military post at San Antonio. Texas. Master Augur received his commission as lieutenant January 4, 1881. He was ordered to the receiving ship Colorado at the Brooklyn Navy Yard in October, but remained only a few days. At the request of his father, he visited him at Fort Leavenworth the following month. Lieutenant Angur's insanity first showed itself has summer, when he went to Washington to visit a young woman to whom he was engaged to be married. It was believed to be the result of loss of sleep and overwork.

DOINGS OF THE BOARD OF TRADE.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trade and Transportation was held yesterday, Ambrose Snow, the president, in the chair. Treasurer E. R. Durkee reported that the receipts were $9,188-26, and the balance on hand January 1, 1884, $1,443-07. John C. Cook, of the committee on occan transportation, recommended the repeal of that portion of the navigation laws which prohibits the purchase of foreign built vessels to be placed under the American flag; that material for ship-building manufactured in foreign countries may be withdrawn from bonded warehouses free of duty; that American ship-builders, for vessels built by them, be given an amount equal to the duty which would have been collected upon imported materials, where the material used is of home production; and that the navigation laws be modified so as to give the owner or master of a vessel the right in any foreign port to engage his crew, upon any terms. John Roach, the ship-builder, spoke upon the propositions by invitation. Further consideration of the matter was desired until next Monday. A. B. Miller presented a series of resolutions, which were adopted, declaring that canal tolls should be abolished. A board of thirty-eight directors was elected, the new members being ex-Judge W. H. Arnoux, John Nix, and Morris S. Wise. The following officers were elected: Ambrose Snow, president; H. B. Claffin, L. J. N. S ark and W. H. Wiley, vice-presidents; E. R. The long strike of the carpet weavers at Higgins & Co.'s worsted mill and earpet mill is ended, and all hands will return to work on Monday. E. S. Higgins, the head of the firm, stated to a Tribuns reporter last night that the questions of difference between his firm and the hands would be settled by arbitration, each side choosing one arbitrator and the two to select a third. They will go over, the pay roll with a view to equalizing wages in the various departments. About 2.000 men, women, boys and girls have been out for nine weeks, and they have lost an aggregate of $150,000 in wages. Most of them, Mr. Higgins thought, did not wish to go out, and have been auxious to return. The trade is much depressed and the firm has paid more than its competitors.

The New-Haven Clock Company has just completed a clock for H. L. The clock was designed for a present to ex-President Villard and was sent to him on Monday. The rough, irregular piece of wood had been polished into a neat block before the work of ornamentation was begun. It was then placed on a silver base with gold rim and bars to represent a yard. On one side of the case was a small bear and on the other an clk. Across the front were the words "Blessed be the tie that binds," and on the dial was the quotation Finis coronal opus. A miniature gold engine surmounted the case standing on a slightly projecting platform. "To Henry Villard from Henry L. Marone, Greenleaf is an engineer on the West Shore road, who lives with his wife in New-Durham. Marone is a contractor who furnishes Italian laborers to work on railreads. Greenleaf introduced Marone into his house, and he soon became an intimate friend of the family. PELHAM MANOR.—About one a. m. yesterday Mr. R. C. De Witt, of Pelham Manor, was aroused by the ringing of his burglar alarm, which indicated that the depot of the New-York, New-Haven and Hartford Railroad Company on the Harlem River Branch had been entered by burglars. Mr. De Witt went to the station, armed with his revolver. Then he discovered that a couple of burglars had forced their way through a small window into the ticket office. He fired at them five times, and the robbers in return fired shot for shot, without effect. They made their escape from the building, followed by Mr. De Witt and some of his neighbors; but owing to the storm and darkness of the night all trace of them was soon lost. They obtained only a small amount of money.

THE FEUARDENT-DI CESNOLA TRIAL.

MR. BAILLARD'S TESTIMONY FINISHED—J. Q. A. WARD CALLED.

Mr. Baillard concluded his direct testimony in the Feuardent-di Cesnola libel trial shortly after the proceedings were resumed yesterday morning. He said: proceedings were resumed yesterday morning. He said:
I did not make any part of the dove held in the hand of the hearded Venus. I put the head on the body and repaired the ankies. I nover used any tools to work over the statues. I have experimented with three or four preparations on as many different pieces of bronze. I am not willing to state what those processes are. I never put any patina on the bronzes. It is two years since I put the preparation selected on the objects. On those not treated the bronze is districted in the baths brought out carvings and inscriptions on statues not previously known.

treated the bronze is disintegrating. The baths brought out carvings and inscriptions on statues not previously known.

On cross-examination the witness said that he knew nothing of Cypriote stone before be went to the Museum. He acquired his process for preserving bronzes through experiment. The Court ruled that the secret process was the property of the witness, and he could not be compelled to disclose it. The witness continued:

I was engaged by the Museum by the week at first. I am now the regular repairer at a salary of $1,200 a year. I have been under General di Cesnoia's direction sluce I was first engaged. Whenever the General had any doubt as to the relation of pieces, they were not put together. The legs and feet of the big Herenles belong to one another. The feet are not in the same place as when found. The statue was not put up properly in Fourteenth-st. I saw that, became plaster had been used to cover up the mark where the right foot originally stood. The cement I used was made of plaster, gum, gelatine and give. I never saw the statuette of venus before I put it in the bath. I never talked with Alley about it and never took it home.

Hiram Hitchcock, of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, was next called. The Court ruled that the defence could not meet the allegations of the Cook pamphlet to the effect that the collection was a fraud by proving single excavations through this witness. The defence wished further to prove by the witness that General di Cesnola had made efforts toward an American sale of his collection before he attempted to sell to the British Museum. As Mr. Hitchcock could not find certain letters from General di Cesnola, his examination was suspended.

J. Q. A. Ward testined that he had been a trustee of the Museum of Art since its organization. He was a member of the investigating committee and of the sub-committee which bathed the statues and called on sculptors and stoneworkers for assistance and opinions. He said in substance:

I examined No. 157 in September, 1880. There has substance:

I examined No. 157 in September, 1880. There has been no change in it since that time. I never had any doubt that it was sculptured by one hand. General di Cesnola has objected to extensive repairs and to restorations when suggested by the frustees. I consider the repairs on the sarcophagus to be perfectly proper ones. It was evident by the fracture that the head of No. 40 belonged to the body. The Egyptian warrior shows no more incongruity of parts than is to be seen in hundreds of other Cypriote statues. Cypriote art was crude. There is not a correctly drawn statue in the whole collection. All the laws of proportion and all rules of art are violated. All the laws of proportion and all rules of art are violated

Mrs. Lucy A. Brinkerhoff has begun a suit before Judge Freedman in the Superior Court to recover right of dower in property between One-hundred-and-seventeenth and One-hundred-and-eighteenth sts. and First and Second aves, which involves an interest in five houses and lots. The suit is brought against Cornella P. Swan and her husband, John L. Swan; the Society for the Rellef of Poor Widows with Small Children; the Harlem Hospital and Dispensary for Women and Children; the Dispensary and Hospital Ward; William H. Ten Eyek and sixteen others. Mrs. Brinkerhoff alleges that she was married to Richard Brinkerhoff on April 24, 1855, and that her husband died on May 31, 1878. After his death she learned for the first time that ten years before he had procured a divorce from her in Connecticut and then conveyed his property to his two daughters. The defence is that the divorce was legally obtained on the ground of desertion.

The evidence in the suit of Miss Bridget E. Cronin against the Rev. Father Florence McCarthy, of 8t. Cecilla Roman Catholic Church in Brooklyn, to recover $10,000 as damages for assault, was all taken in the Supreme Court in Brooklyn yesterday. The defendant denied Miss Cronin's statements. She had continued to confess to him, he said, once a week after the time when she declared he had tried to assault her. Several witnesses testified that Father McCarthy's face bore no scratches at the time Miss Cronin alleged that it did, and that she went to confession to him after January 12. In rebuttal, Miss Carrie Mahoney testified that she saw Miss Cronin give up the organ keys to Father McCarthy, saying that she had received insults enough.

The case was summed up and given to the jury late in the afternoon, and they were directed to give a scaled verdict this morning if agreement was reached.

RETIREMENT OF A VETERAN REPORTER.

When the House of Commons assembles again the Repeaters' Gallery will be found to have lost its most striking figure. Mr. Charles Ross, for about half a century the chief of The Times Parliamentary staff, is about to retire. Extreme old age, for the veteran has seen nearly four-score years of life, is the cause of his retirement. His venerable face and form, and still youthful bnoyancy, will be greatly missed by the occupants of the gallery. That he should have continued to discharge his most delicate and trying duties so long is an example of what a keen mind, combined with a well-balanced and well-cared-for body, is capable. The mantle of Mr. Ross worthly falls upon Mr. F. Leyeester, the able writer of The Times Parliamentary summary.
